SUBJECT : Reaction to 9 June 1964 Reorientation in Supervisory Responsibilities

1. The session overall was beneficial. Particularly, it was good to see the Director of Central Intelligence. I have seen the President of the United States more frequently than I have seen Mr. McCone.

2. Several years ago I attended a Basic Supervision Course and, later, a Basic Management Course. Both were geared to groups of about 20 people and utilized the "case method" to make their point. They interspaced the sessions with senior speakers. I considered both of those courses, naturally, far more beneficial than the one-day session. Supervision is too important a responsibility to relegate to a one-time, one-day session, although I appreciate the fact that this one-day session served a useful purpose in adding top management emphasis to a continuing need for the day-in and day-out development of supervisors at all levels.
